NOIBU, CANADA

Re: Senior Front End Angular Developer

Dear Hiring Manager,

My name is Aili Zou, and I have used Alice as my preferred name since I started studying at McMaster University in 2014. It is my 10th year in Canada, and I am a new mom with a 19 months old son and am proudly Canadian.

I am fascinated and amazed about what you have been doing. I had the experience that I failed to pay with Alafoss, an Icelandic wool online website. I was frustrated, so half decided not to buy the product, but I thought it would be nice to let the owner know the issue as it would impact their sales. I sent an email and learned they were using Shopify, which was a big surprise.

When I learned what Noibu does is to help clients monitor the errors happened in their websites and quantify the impacts, this really resonate with me. It is so helpful to the e-commerce clients, and I am definitely want to be part of it. Furthermore, I admire the vision from Filip to see Noibu as platform agnostic, such as Noibu is not only targeting the e-commerce websites but also Shopify, Salesforce, and etc. Additionally, Noibu offer direct fixes for clients. Noibu is a rising star. It has original ideas, solves the pain points of already established websites, and has so much potential.

As an experienced Angular front-end developer, I am enthusiastic to build beautiful and functional UI with smooth client experience. Before I joined RBC, I helped global health care company DF/Net Research to modernize their web portal, and resolve challenges on daily basis. When I joined RBC, I worked with the team to transition our tech to RxJS and Strict TypeScript programming. I really enjoyed the work I had been doing, as it was a lot of fun in programming, and the environment was dynamic. Most importantly, I believe what Noibu does is truly meaningful. I am excited about the opportunity to work with brilliant collaborative engineers to build the dashboard, which combines beautiful UIs with the quantified data to showcase for clients, along with the opportunity to help client directly fixing their issues.

Thank you for your time and consideration!

Sincerely,

Alice (Aili) Zou
